

DIRECTOR'S FIVE-DAY FORECAST

November 24, 2025

Tútákà Gutíshí Ch'át'ághà
"Water Edge Freeze"

This week...

Afternoon Tea

"How we understand history is largely contingent on the perspective and objective of the hand that records it." Michelle Good's quote from Truth Telling: Seven Conversations about Indigenous Life in Canada emphasizes the crucial roles of perspective and intention in shaping our understanding of history. This assertion resonates strongly in the context of Indigenous education, underscoring the importance of recognizing whose narratives are prioritized and how they shape our collective understanding of historical occurrences.

Historically, Indigenous perspectives have often been marginalized or misrepresented in mainstream educational curricula, leading to a skewed understanding of events that have profoundly impacted Indigenous communities. By acknowledging that history is recorded with specific objectives in mind, we can begin to appreciate that dominant narratives may omit or distort the experiences and truths of Indigenous peoples. Incorporating Indigenous perspectives into education involves more than just including different viewpoints; it requires re-evaluating the core narratives that shape our understanding of the past. It calls for a commitment to truth-telling and a willingness to engage with histories that reflect the lived experiences of Indigenous communities.

Last week, our education leadership team held a productive and engaging meeting. We took the opportunity to review our operational calendar and work plans for the upcoming month. Additionally, each team member contributed valuable updates, sharing their progress and insights, which fostered a sense of connection and accountability. Furthermore, we received essential updates from our Events Planner and IT Services team. Overall, the meeting was productive and successful, setting a positive tone for the initiatives and endeavours in the weeks ahead. We are excited about the work to come and the collaborative spirit we've cultivated!

November 24 - Mobile Optometry Clinic begins at MHHS (all week)

November 25 - Chiila and CBBMS Progress Reports sent home

November 26 - Buffalo (Xani-tii) Harvest for MHHS

November 27 - Chiila and CBBMS Parent-Teacher Interviews

November 28 - Professional Development Day

Date	Time	Location
November 24	AM/PM	Education Office
November 25	AM/PM	Education Office/Offsite
November 26	AM/PM	Education Office/BAEC
November 27	AM/PM	Education Office
November 28	AM/PM	MHHS