MESSAGE FROM XÀKÍJÍ

Tsuut'ina Nation – A New Chapter of Service and Accountability

Our recent Inauguration was a humbling experience — a celebration of the people, not of individuals elected, but of the power of the Peoples' choice. This moment belongs to the Nation. Siyísgáàs to everyone who came out to the ceremony; your attendance and encouragement made this event truly special. We serve and represent you, and that responsibility guides every step we take.

As I share with you today:

“Find out where we were, find where we are and most importantly, find out where we want to be.”

This vision will shape our priorities and our progress.

On my first day in office, I met with our Human Resources Director to discuss accountability. Xàkújághá yíná serve the people and will be held accountable. This principle will remain at the heart of our work.

We are working on completing key governance priorities:

- Finalizing the Xàkújághá yíná legislation
- Advancing the Constitution
- Updating the Electoral Code
- Modernizing Human Resource policies and procedures

These actions are more than administrative; they are commitments to fairness, integrity, equality, and transparency.

Our future depends on our youth. We are developing and strengthening connections to ensure young voices are heard and included in shaping priorities. Their ideas and energy will help guide us where we want to be.

I also want to extend my deepest condolences to the Crowchild family for the loss of Cori Anne Crowchild. We are thinking of you during this difficult time.

Together, we have come far. Together, we will continue to build a future rooted in respect, accountability, and unity. We will always ensure the voices of the people remain at the heart of everything we do.
