RE: Lance Manywounds Public Remarks

I want to take a moment to respond to recent public remarks made by Mr. Lance Manywounds on social media. While every individual is entitled to their opinion, we, as Tsuut'ina people, must hold ourselves to a higher standard—one rooted in truth, respect, and responsibility.

Mr. Manywounds has made several serious accusations without providing facts or evidence to support them. He speaks in vague terms and suggests he “might get sued,” as though that disclaimer justifies the spreading of unverified information. This is not a demonstration of accountability—it is an effort to create division at a time when unity is more important than ever.

While social media can be a useful tool for sharing updates and staying connected, it is not the place for serious discussions that require context, facts, and accountability. Complex issues affecting our Nation deserve more than soundbites and speculation—they deserve respectful dialogue and responsible leadership.

Tsuut'ina has come too far to fall into the trap of tearing each other down. We are stronger than that. Our future depends on our ability to speak with respect, challenge with integrity, and build with purpose. Let us continue to move forward, guided not by negativity or personal agendas, but by respect, truth, and a genuine commitment to the success of our people—together.

Respectfully,

Head Chief Roy Whitney-Onespot
